All submitted papers are evaluated by independent reviewers and are subject to editorial revision.

Referee’s confidential report

This report form will not be made available to the authors. It contains several questions, and your answers to these questions will indicate whether you consider the paper acceptable for publication in the PHARMACOLOGICAL REPORTS or if it should be rejected and if so what are its drawbacks.

The first section of the form is designed to assess technical quality of the paper and its impact on the field. Like many other journals, we now cannot accept for publication the papers which are technically correct but lack significant novel findings. The technical quality of the paper is scored between 1 and 7. Papers rated below 3 are highly unlikely to be recommended for publication while those scoring 3 can be published if significance of the study is high. Hence, a paper which is rated technically average and of low impact is likely to be rejected. In general, a paper will be considered for publication if its additive score is 7 or more.

Moreover, your assessment if revision of the manuscript according to your recommendations would markedly increase its impact factor will help us judge whether the revisions can improve the paper enough to process it further.

Since we have to save space in the journal, it would be important for us to know if the manuscript can be reduced in length without compromising its scientific. Any specific suggestion on possible cuts will be appreciated (e.g. some figures may be unnecessary). Please indicate this in your report to the Editor (at the bottom of the form) and in your report to the authors.

In addition, your comment on compliance of the procedures with international laws and guidelines on experiments on humans and animals will help us decide if the paper can be published in our journal. PHARMACOLOGICAL REPORTS will reject articles which are considered to be ethically questionable.

In the second section of the form we ask you to specify whether or not in your opinion the paper is acceptable for publication. If the study is interesting but major revision is recommended to make the manuscript suitable for publication, we strongly encourage authors to consider the comments of the referees and to resubmit a completely new manuscript. In such cases, please indicate if you would be willing to review the new version.

We also would like to know your opinion on correctness of the language of the manuscript. English is not the first language of many authors submitting papers to our journal and it would be helpful to know if any corrections (made by the authors or the Editorial Office) are necessary before the manuscript is sent to press.

The last section will contain any your confidential comments to the Editor, if necessary.

Referee’s report to the authors

On this form, please specify your critical comments on the paper and you recommendations on how it can be improved. Comments which are precise and concrete will be of great value to the authors.

We would like to ask you to avoid any remarks on this form about your opinion as to whether the paper should be accepted for publication.
